3. NASA astronaut Nicole Aunapu Mann made history as the first Native American woman in space. A member of the Wailacki of the Round Valley Indian Tribes in Northern California, she carried a dreamcatcher with her to the International Space Station, a symbol of protection and guidance according to Native American tradition. Mann is passionate about promoting diversity in the STEM fields and inspiring the next generation of scientists and explorers. She has said, "It's important that we celebrate our diversity and really communicate that specifically to the younger generation. It's going to be the kids of today that are going to be leading us into the future."
